ESA - What is concurrent engineering?

Online Library Request For Concurrent Design Review

It's more a question of the processing of a request by the application and how many requests arrive during that processing. For example, if a request takes on average 2 seconds to fulfill (from receiving it at the web server to processing it through the application to sending back the response) then it could need to handle a lot of concurrent requests if it gets many requests per second.

Rather than trying to do Concurrent Engineering in scheduled periodic meetings and many formal reviews, team members should be continuously working together and calling huddles to make decisions and

resolve issues as they need to be addressed. Thus, the design is continuously “reviewed” more effectively early and often.
