The New SAT is totally different. The problems are similar to the kinds of things you'd see in your math class, and what makes the problems "hard" is not unfamiliarity but rather the complexity of the material itself. So if you see a #20 problem on the New SAT and don't know the formula or concept, then you're almost certainly not going to be getting the question right. However, if you do know the formula or concept being tested, then the question actually becomes quite easy.
